Racism is a Public Health Crisis - Attacking the 2 Pandemics

2020 brought a pivotal time in our shared history with two pandemics which presented symptoms related to 'breathing' that have been responsible for unprecedented deaths. COVID-19 hit like a fierce storm causing varying levels of loss including lives and jobs, while putting severe strain on our healthcare systems. Simultaneously, systemic and structural racism have been present for centuries, and have, once again, been forced to the forefront of our collective consciousness through events in Minnesota, Kentucky and here in Rochester, NY. From what has already been seen and heard, there is a preponderance of evidence to conclude that the killings of George Floyd, Breonna Taylor and Daniel Prude, respectively, reflect systemic failures of policing and mental health care. These are failures we've seen far too many times in this country. They have deadly and disproportionate consequences for people of color. When coupled with the disproportionate suffering stemming from the COVID-19 pandemic and a plethora of other racial based health inequities, it is clear that Racism is a Public Health Crisis!

How do we heal our communities, boost our hurting economies and help our families thrive during a time when so much uncertainty has heightened issues related to poverty, social or racial injustice, education and health disparities? These issues have become persistent and pervasive and remain top priorities for communities of color. Now is the time to act and demand change in attitudes, power structures and systems, policy and practices. Collectively we must be intentional about lifting every voice to "Promote Equity and Justice for All".

This regional conference series will feature keynotes and high-quality workshops that showcase speakers with expertise in the areas of service delivery, public policy, racial equity, economic development, evidenced based research, community organizing, social determinants of health, philanthropy, corporate responsibility, healthcare, trauma, lived experience/human centered design, education and more. ABC's Signature Event will convene business and community leaders, providers, consumers and stakeholders to offer strategies to counteract the disparate impact of these 2 pandemics.

This is an opportunity to demonstrate your commitment to "Promoting Equity and Justice for All" by becoming a sponsor. Your support will enable ABC to offer high-quality, cost-effective professional development designed to improve community outcomes by offering strategies that address systemic and structural barriers related to the 2 pandemics.

Conference Target Audience:
